

Van Zyverden's
WOODLAND PLANT TRILLIUM YELLOW

Sadly, unscrupulous collectors have decimated many wild populations of Trilliums and many are now endangered. Rest assured that we offer only commercial nursery propagated plants. You can help ensure their survival by planting some in your own garden. You will need to have the appropriate conditions. Trilliums are not a good choice for the desert southwest due to its drought conditions, unless special arrangements have been made. They are a sight to behold not only in their native habitat but also in the garden. They are recognized by their whorl of three leaves and showy flowers. In fact, nearly all parts of the plant come in threes.

About This Variety: Yellow Trillium (T. Luteum) displays upright gold or bronze-green flowers on variegated green leaves and emits a sweet delightful citrus-like scent.

Growing Instructions: Trilliums demand rich, slightly acid, woodsy soil that never dries out so some care is required in choosing a site

Care Tip: In order for Trillium to thrive in the home garden, one must mimic their native habitat by providing moist, well draining soil enriched with organic matter. Once established, they require little maintenance or care.

Exposure: Partial shade

Height: Grows 6-12" tall

Spacing: Plant 12" apart, 2" deep

Hardy in: USDA zones 3-9

Guaranteed to grow 1 year from purchase if directions are followed. Any concerns related to quality and/or counts feel free to contact us.
