POPPIES PINK RUFFLES

Oriental poppies (Papaver) are long used by gardeners in a range of landscape situations. Planting poppies is simple and rewarding when their blooms appear. The clumps will become larger each year but will never be invasive. They can be forced indoors with special treatment. They also make for stunning cut flowers, but you will have to sear the ends of freshly cut stems with a match. As they have appeared on ravaged battlefields, they have come to symbolize death and rebirth.

About This Variety: Papaver orientale 'Pink Ruffles' produces a cheerful display of huge, satiny flowers in spring. Pink Ruffles has deep, salmon-pink flowers with unusual, fringed petal edges. The blooms attract butterflies and make excellent specimen plants. Poppies are also deer and rabbit resistant.

Growing Instructions: Oriental poppies grow well in poor to average soil; however, soggy ground should be avoided as they hate wet feet. They prefer the cooler temperatures of spring and fall. After flowering, allow the poppies to die back during the summer heat, as excess watering will kill them.

Care Tip: Do not disturb after established as one is likely to lose a blooming season. They are best divided and replanted in fall if one must move them. Winter protection in zones 3 -6 may be necessary which can be done after a light freeze, with mulch, pine needles or some other loose material.
