

Van Zyverden's
LOUISIANA IRIS JACK ATTACK

The Louisiana Iris is native to the southeastern United States but is proving to be highly adaptable to other climates, soils and cultural practices. Aptly named for its region of origin, this species grows in swamps, along riversides and damp hillsides. They will tolerate a wide range of moisture conditions, as long as they get at least an inch of water per week.

About This Variety: Louisiana Jack Attack delivers a lot of wow with its striking color and impressive flower size. Ruffled, wine purple flowers with green foliage. Grows in wet areas where other plants will not grow.

Growing Instructions: Plant rhizomes horizontally so that the top is about half an inch above soil level. In hot areas of the country, they can be planted just below the soil level. Initially water deeply during periods of drought.

Care Tip: After flowering, cut out the flower stalk, leaving the foliage. To prolong optimal results, they may need to be dug, divided and replanted every 3-6 years.

Exposure: full sun

Height: grows 50" tall

Spacing: plant 12-24" apart, just below soil surface" deep

USDA Zones: hardy in USDA zones 5-9

Guaranteed to grow 1 year from purchase if directions are followed. Any concerns related to quality and/or counts feel free to contact us.
